Betsy is doing just great. She went through a series of obedience classes and walks on a leash now beautifully. She loves riding in the car. She definitely loves all people and rarely barks at anyone. So now that it is getting cooler, we'll try and take her [to the local dog park] at least twice a week. Most of the time at home she just likes to be near us. She still sleeps in her crate at night and often just goes in there during the day, but most of the time she lies on a rug near the door. We really love her a lot. She walks my speed, stops, and automatically sits when I need to rest. People in town always remark how well behaved she is.
